

Black Lives Matter

T4H is a proud black owned social enterprise whose ethos is to reach into communities to provide services of support and empowerment to those most in need.

The devastating death of George Floyd and countless others has sparked much-needed conversations about the prevalence of systemic racism in society. All the while, the ongoing coronavirus pandemic has continued, with recent findings revealing that black Britons are almost twice as likely than white Britons to die from the virus.

These two events highlight more than ever the need for organisations such as ours that aim to at best remove or at least reduce the impact of health inequalities seen in [Black, Asian and ethnic minority communities]/[Peoples of Colour] communities.

T4H is proud of its record of successful delivery and will continue to do the work that it has always done regardless of race or class.

We have developed strong relationships that reach across social divides and work with local authorities, housing organisations and other partners to not only raise awareness of health inequalities and disparity of care facing [Black, Asian and ethnic minority communities]/[Peoples of Colour] but to bring health improvements into all communities to have and live better lives.
